TRANSPORT IN INDIA

Transport in the Republic of India is an important part of India's economy. Since the economy liberalization of the 1990s, infrastructure development has progressed rapidly, and today there is a variety of mode of transport by land, water and air. In the interim, public transport remains the primary mode of transport for most of the population, and India's public transport systems are among the most heavily used in the world. India's rail network is the 4th longest and the most heavily used system in the world, transporting 8,244 million passengers and over 969 million tons of freight annually.

In addition, only around 10% of Indian households own a motorcycle. Despite this, the number of deaths caused by traffic is among the highest in the world and is still increasing.

The automobile industry is currently rapidly growing with an annual production of over 4.6 million vehicles, and vehicle volume is expected to rise greatly in the future.

Several aspects of the transport sector are still riddled with problems due to outdated infrastructure and lack of investment in less economically active parts of the country. The demand for transport infrastructure and services has been rising by around 10% a year with current infrastructure being unable to meet these growing demands.
